PASTOR'S CORNER

Unidentified, Chapter Four

Later that evening, J.B. anxiously checked his phone for any message from Olsen. He sat on the side of a patio lounge chair shielding his phone from the orange-golden rays of the setting sun – nothing from Olsen yet. He stared back at the house deep in thought about what the object might be; he moved his stare to above the house where it hovered last night. His mother interrupted his wondering, “J.B. your friends are here.” “Friends?” he asked. “Glen Olsen and his brother Mike,” she offered matter-of-factly. He sprang up and ran inside, the three of them sprinted the stairs to J.B.’s bedroom.

“Wait ‘til you see this, man,” younger Olsen exhaled, “it’s gonna knock you out!” Mike Olsen took the captain’s chair at the computer and somehow managed to pull up J.B.’s email account without use of the password. “I emailed you, J.B., and sent you the pics you sent me...with some fine tuning.” J.B. overwhelmed already by anticipation just nodded, “Yeah.” Older Olsen continued, “None of the individual pics yielded anything, but when I took apart the video you took, I noticed something.” He began to play the video on the monitor.

J.B. leaned forward for the revelation, his shaky video replaying before him – the window, the shingles, the rain gutter, darkness in the backyard, and then a starlit sky. “Didja see it?” his friend asked, “Didja see it?” “See what? I didn’t see anything new – are you guys messin’ with me?” J.B. nearly blubbered, frustrated in his disappointment. “No,” his friend’s older brother answered, “watch it again.” Mike restarted the video and slowed it down as the image shook from window to roof to backyard. Glen’s finger was on the screen as he directed, “Watch right here.” “What am I looking at?” J.B. sputtered. Mike responded, “That’s your sister’s inflatable pool in the backyard. You see the stars in the water?” “Yes” “Now, keep watching.” J.B. was glued; he held his breath, as he watched the stars in the pool water be eclipsed by some great black thing with rounded edges, almost circular. “It’s real!!!!” he shouted. Still doubting his own eyes, J.B. interrogated the Olsen brothers, “What did you see? “What did you see?”

Agreeing upon what they had each seen, the conference on “What is it?” began in earnest. A space ship? A top-secret government thing? A massive drone? An animal? A bird? A weather phenomenon? By the time J.B.’s mom put an end to the conference, they had for their own reasons eliminated the drone, animal, bird and weather considerations. Because of the remaining theories, they agreed to keep it to themselves for the time being. They each kept watch from their own windows that night.
